Release 11 Documentation

Oracle Applications Documentation is available electronically in Adobe Acrobat® format. Online HELP text for Release 11 is derived from the same user documentation and is available as HTML files. Hardcopy documentation is available for purchase from Media Services in Oracle Support. See the table below for a listing of document part numbers.

HTML format

HTML formatted documentation is the basis of the online Help system for Oracle Applications. There are four versions of the HTML text, depending on the customer market segment.

- U.S. Commercial Market
- U.K. Commercial Market
- U.S. Public Sector Market
- International Market

Due to space limitations, only the international version of HTML Help files is included on this CD. All four versions are available on the Help CD which ships with Release 11 software. The HTML documentation includes Oracle Information Navigator, a Java-based utility which allows you to do text searches within and across documents.

Adobe Acrobat® PDF format

Get Acrobat Reader PDF files allow you to view documentation as it was created. You can search and print PDF files from the Adobe Acrobat Reader. You must use Acrobat 3.0 or higher to view these documents. Version 3.01 for Windows 95 and Windows NT is included on the Documentation library CD in the acroread directory. Execute ar32e301.exe to install the Acrobat reader. For all other platforms, click on the Get Acrobat Reader image to download a free copy.

The problems of designing large software systems were studied through interviewing personnel from 17 large projects. A layered behavioral model is used to analyze how three of these problems—the thin spread of application domain knowledge, fluctuating and conflicting requirements, and communication bottlenecks and breakdowns—affected software productivity and quality through their impact on cognitive, social, and organizational processes.

What information about data base technology does a manager need to make prudent decisions about using this new technology? To provide this information the National Bureau of Standards and the Association for Computing Machinery established a workshop of approximately 80 experts in five major subject areas. The five subject areas were auditing, evolving technology, government regulations, standards, and user experience. Each area prepared a report contained in these proceedings. The proceedings p ...

Scientific computing systems for individuals were pioneered early at Hewlett-Packard, beginning with the 9100A Desktop Calculator in 1968. Extensions of this first machine were soon seen in Personal Peripherals, such as Printers, Tape Cartridges, and Plotters, and followed by Graphic CRT Displays. By early 1972, the Desktop unit had been augmented by a very powerful Pocket Calculator, the ground-breaking HP 35A. This paper traces the evolution of these machines to the present day, ...

Two often-contradictory dilemmas confront firms in their efforts at promoting IT-based innovation: facilitate localized exploitation of the IT infrastructure within individual business units, but also ensure enterprise-wide integration of IT innovation initiatives to facilitate business applications that exploit inter-unit synergies. Therefore, developing an IT infrastructure that is conducive to both localized exploitation and enterprise-wide integration is important. In this context, IT infras ...

This paper presents an approach to high-level support of office workers by embedding office knowledge in a network of distributed cooperating knowledge-based or expert "assistants" and servers. These knowledge-based systems incorporate both factual and procedural knowledge and are capable of making use of existing conventional office technology. They constitute a form of computer-supported cooperative work. We describe a common architecture for our assistants and servers that in ...

September 2005 International Journal of Network Management, Volume 15 Issue 5 Publisher: John Wiley & Sons, Inc.

Full text available: pdf(132.43 KB) Additional Information: full citation, abstract, references, index terms

Best maintenance practices in communications networks management are benchmarking standards that, if carefully implemented, will enhance the integrity, reliability and maintenance costs of communications networks. This paper defines best maintenance practices in communications network management within a concise framework encompassing measurable performance-level goals as well as methods and procedures needed to achieve these goals. The best maintenance practice recommendations of this paper cov ...

Full text available: pdf(1.86 MB) Additional Information: full citation, abstract, index terms

This paper reports on the results of a study, sponsored by AFOSR, ARO and ONR, of current and future research directions in technological areas of computer science. This study is similar in spirit to the NSF-sponsored COSERS (Computer Science and Engineering Research Study) project, but is narrower in scope, emphasizing concepts and research issues relevant to software technology rather than the whole spectrum of research directions in computer science. It was started in the summer of 1975 ...

Full text available: pdf(3.10 MB)

Additional Information: full citation, abstract, references, citings, index terms

Semantic data models have emerged from a requirement for more expressive conceptual data models. Current generation data models lack direct support for relationships, data abstraction, inheritance, constraints, unstructured objects, and the dynamic properties of an application. Although the need for data models with richer semantics is widely recognized, no single approach has won general acceptance. This paper describes the generic properties of semantic data models and presents a represen ...

Lead time reduction is a key concern of many industrial buyers of capital facilities given current economic conditions. Supply chain initiatives in manufacturing settings have led owners to expect that dramatic reductions in lead time are possible in all phases of their business, including the delivery of capital materials. Further, narrowing product delivery windows and increasing pressure to be first-to-market create significant external pressure to reduce lead time. In this paper, a case s ...

Business-to-Business (B2B) technologies pre-date the Web. They have existed for at least as long as the Internet. B2B applications were among the first to take advantage of advances in computer networking. The Electronic Data Interchange (EDI) business standard is an illustration of such an early adoption of the advances in computer networking. The ubiquity and the affordability of the Web has made it possible for the masses of businesses to automate their B2B interactions. However, several issu ...

Business-to-business electronic commerce (B2B EC) opens up new possibilities of trade. For example, new business partners from around the globe can be found, their offers can be compared, even complex negotiations can be conducted electronically, and a contract can be drawn up and fulfilled via an electronic marketplace. However, a sophisticated data management is required to provide such factilities. In this paper, the results of a multinational project on creating a business-to-business elect ...

Electronic messaging, whether in an office environment or for electronic commerce, is normally carried out in natural language, even when supported by information systems. For a variety of reasons, it would be useful if electronic messaging systems could have semantic access to, that is, access to the meanings and contents of, the messages they process. Given that natural language understanding is not a practicable alternative, there remain three approaches to delivering systems with semant ...

Full text available: pdf(1.98 MB) Additional Information: full citation, abstract, references, citings, index terms

Real-time digital systems are largely a technical innovation of the past decade, but they appear destined to become more wide spread in the future. They monitor or control a real physical environment, such as an air-traffic situation, as distinguished from simulating that environment on an arbitrary time scale. The complexity and rapid variation of such an environment necessitates use of a fast and versatile central-control device, a role well suited to digital computers. The usual system w ...

The procurement of complex software product involves many risks. To properly assess and manage those risks, Bell Canada has developed methods and tools that combine process capability assessment with a static analysis based software product assessment. This paper describes the software product assessment process that is part of our risk management approach. The process and the tools used to conduct a product assessment are described. The assessment is in part based on static source code metrics ...

Kevin E. Carlin, Dino R. Russo, Brad Balfour

December 1990 Proceedings of the conference on TRI-ADA '90

Publisher: ACM Press

Full text available: pdf(1.68 MB) Additional Information: full citation, abstract, references, citings

This paper describes the recursive object oriented life-cycle which has been developed in conjunction with the authors' Object Oriented Development (OOD) methods. The basic goals that a life-cycle must satisfy are described and the recursive life-cycle are mapped back to them. A description of how this life-cycle may be implemented within the framework of existing standards such as DOD-STD-2167A is also included. The objective of software development using domain-specific software architectures (DSSA) is reduction in time and cost of producing specific application systems within a supported domain, along with increased product quality, improved manageability, and positioning for acquisition of future business. Key aspects of the approach include software reuse based on parameterization of generic components and interconnection of components within a canonical solution framework. Storyspace, a hypertext writing environment, has been widely used for writing, reading, and research for nearly fifteen years. The appearance of a new implementation provides a suitable occasion to review the design of Storyspace, both in its historical context and in the context of contemporary research. Of particular interest is the opportunity to examine its use in a variety of published documents, all created within one system, but spanning the most of the history of literary hypertext.

Software reuse can be achieved through an organization that focuses on utilization of life cycle products from previous developments. Modern day enterprises exhibit a growing trend toward adoption of enterprise computing services for efficient resource utilization, scalability, and flexibility. These environments are characterized by heterogeneous, distributed computing systems exchanging enormous volumes of time-critical data with varying levels of access control in a dynamic business environment. The enterprises are thus faced with significant challenges as they endeavor to achieve their primary goals, and simultaneously ens ...

Constructing software by integrating commercial off-the-shelf (COTS) components is widely practised, particularly in the IT service industry. For vendors of COTS components, requirements engineering is particularly challenging. To continually improve their products, vendors must identify and analyze problems that occur when their components are used in a wide variety of integrated solutions, and they must anticipate new applications in which their components could be used. In this paper, we desc ...

The rapid and accelerating move towards use of mobile technologies has increasingly provided people and organizations with the ability to work away from the office and on the move. The new ways of working afforded by these technologies are often characterized in terms of access to information and people anytime, anywhere. This article presents a study of mobile workers that highlights different facets of access to remote people and information, and different facets of anytime, anywhere ...

The Grid and agent communities both develop concepts and mechanisms for open distributed systems, albeit from different perspectives. The Grid community has historically focused on "brawn": infrastructure, tools, and applications for reliable and secure resource sharing within dynamic and geographically distributed virtual organizations. In contrast, the agents community has focused on "brain": autonomous problem solvers that can act flexibly in uncertain and dynamic environments. Yet as the sca ...

In Distributed Interactive Simulation (DIS), each participating node is responsible for maintaining its own model of the synthetic environment. Problems may arise if significant inconsistencies are allowed to exist between these separate world views, resulting in unrealistic simulation results or negative training, and a corresponding degradation of interoperability in a DIS simulation exercise. In the DIS community, this is known as the simulator terrain database (TDB) correlation problem. ...

This article discusses the role that rare classes and rare cases play in data mining. The problems that can result from these two forms of rarity are described in detail, as are methods for addressing these ...

This paper presents secure program partitioning, a language-based technique for protecting confidential data during computation in distributed systems containing mutually untrusted hosts. Confidentiality and integrity policies can be expressed by annotating programs with security types that constrain information flow; these programs can then be partitioned automatically to run securely on heterogeneously trusted hosts. The resulting communicating subprograms collectively implement the original p ...
